ABOUT US

At John Hopkins, classrooms are inquiry based and conceptually focused, so students make connections between each of the eight required subject groups and the real world. Our arts program allows students to express their interests through “focus classes”. This allows students to pick points of interest and study them in great depth through special schedule accommodation, exclusive for our program students. John Hopkins runs on an alternating block-schedule, but our magnet students will have their program class everyday. We want our students to spend the maximum amount of time in a setting that they truly enjoy.
